RULES AND REGULATIONS AFFECTING CLINICAL PRACTICE

Developing Your Practice in Spite of the EU Regulatory Juggernaut

Saturday 21st May 2011

Royal Society of Medicine,
1 Wimpole Street, London W1G 0AE

The Alliance for Natural Health International (ANH-Intl), in association with the General Naturopathic Council (GNC), invites you to attend its inaugural day of essential professional training to bring you bang up to date on the key regulatory issues set to make or break your clinical practice in 2011/12 and beyond. We live in unprecedented times, where European regulatory control of our practices is soon to replace self-regulation and even national legislation. In one day our trainers will cut right down to the detail of how the complex new rules and regulations will affect your practice. We will educate you on how to communicate with your clients and what you can and can't say when advertising or promoting your services to stay within the law. There will be no dry accounts of EU red tape! This day is designed to help you understand, communicate accurately and keep you in practice. A Q&A session at the end of the day's training will ensure all burning questions are fully addressed.

Don't miss out, book now.
Space is limited!

RULES AND REGULATIONS AFFECTING CLINICAL PRACTICE

Why this event cannot be missed

Naturopathy, nutritional therapy, herbalism and related disciplines are all being scrutinised closely by government food and medicine regulators tasked with implementing both national and European Union (EU) laws. Their work is supplemented by that of local Trading Standards officers as well as the independent advertising watchdog, the Advertising Standards Agency (ASA) whose remit now extends to the Internet (as of 1st March 2011). The regulatory environment is changing rapidly as national laws are increasingly being replaced by EU laws. European general food law, the controversial Nutrition & Health Claims Regulation, EU food supplements, medicines and herbal medicines laws all work together to produce a complex regulatory framework that increasingly impinges on the way you practice. These laws are being implemented incrementally; most have either been newly implemented—but are yet to be fully policed or enforced—or will be implemented in the coming year or two.

The bottom line is this: for the vast majority of practitioners, it will be impossible to practice and promote yourself as you have done in the last 5 years. If you don't adjust to these new rules and regulations, your entire professional future is at risk. And that affects, not only you and your livelihood, it also affects your clients, whose health is dependent on your services.

Why is the timing so crucial?

Compounding the impact of the rules and regulations on your practice, is the fact that policing of them is being ramped up dramatically by anti-natural health groups and sceptics—such as those in the Nightingale Collaboration—who are specifically targeting CAM practitioners. Make no mistake, these people believe that many claims made by practitioners—claims that have been used for years based primarily on clinical experience and even limited clinical trials or other experimental evidence—are misleading or unable to be substantiated. While government departments may lack the staff to go out and police the trade, these volunteer groups are making the 'dobbing in' of practitioners their personal hobby. The difficulty, for many practitioners, is that the rules and regulations are based on evidence standards that are almost impossible to meet for the majority of health relationships. Even reducing your salt intake to lower your risk of hypertension, or increasing intake of fruit and vegetables to reduce heart disease and cancer risk, fail these standards of evidence because proof by 'generally accepted evidence' taken from randomised clinical trials is now needed.
